That better work may be done it is necessary that the physicians have a more thorough acquaintance with the personal history and the details of the mental and physical condition of each patient, and that the number of attendants be such as to enable them to give more attention to patients needing special care, exercise or control. As a benefit from this expense might be expected some shortening of the period of detention of recoverable cases, an increased number of discharges, and a more accurate and complete basis for the selection of patients to do necessary work, and for judgment in the matter of discharging individual patients. This list of recommendations is large, but I would urgently advise putting and maintaining the hospital in good condition, in the belief that the propriety of doing so...
